The year of 2022 marks the 100th anniversary of the formation of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics – one of the new states which played an important role in the world history of the XX century. In this regard, the history of the creation and development of states, which were established during the XX century, is a central topic of the conference. “New States” refers to a wide range of state entities:

- national states created after the continental empires collapse as a result of World War I;
- Eastern European states that entered the socialist path of development after World War II (Warsaw Pact countries);
- Eastern European countries of the post-socialist era, created upon the “velvet revolutions”;
- former colonial states of Latin America, Asia and Africa that gained independence in the XX century;
- independent states created upon the USSR collapse;
- unrecognized states;
- interstate formations: unions, confederations, leagues, alliances, etc.

The chronological framework of the considered topics covers the entire XX century – from 1901 to 2000 inclusive.

During the conference the key attention will be paid to the history of the USSR formation and development: the circumstances of its establishment, theoretical and ideological foundations, national policy, peculiarities of public administration and administrative-territorial structure. An important aspect is the phenomenon of historical memory of states created in the XX century, stored in archives, memorials and media.

Topics for discussion:

- historical experience of the formation of nation-states in the XX century: causes, circumstances, features of the state structure;
- the history of the creation of nation-states after the World War I;
- Eastern European states in the second half of the XX century: from the creation to the collapse of the “socialist camp”;
- the history of colonial states’ national liberation struggle for independence in the XX century;
- the history of independent states creation after 1991;
- the state, society and personality: the experience of confrontation/interaction in the context of the new states creation in the XX century;
- social, ethnic and confessional conflicts on the new states territory of the XX century;
- prerequisites for the USSR formation;
- Bolshevik leadership discussions on the principles of the future Union structure;
- circumstances of the new republics incorporation into the USSR in 1918- 1940;
- problems of the USSR administrative-territorial structure;
- development of the USSR national economy and inter-republican economic relations;
- Soviet national policy: ideological and theoretical foundations and mechanisms of implementation;
- the phenomenon of the party-state management system in the USSR: conditions of creation, features of its running, bottlenecks;
- reasons and prerequisites for the collapse of the USSR as a “multinational union state”;
- archeography and archival studies. The history of the creation and development of new states in the XX century in new documents, scientific publications, Internet projects, etc.
